Greetings!

Farmers Union and the cooperative community of the Upper Midwest is proud to offer the College Conference on Cooperatives, a program designed to give college students a thorough understanding of cooperatives, the foundations on which they are built and the career opportunities they offer.

Farmers Union was founded in 1902 upon three basic principles: education, cooperation, and legislation. The organization's members believe education is the foundation upon which strong and vital rural communities are built. By educating people of all ages, Farmers Union encourages them to build cooperatives, strengthen their communities and improve their quality of life through civic engagement.

The College Conference on Cooperatives features presentations by cooperative leaders from all across the cooperative spectrum. Through this three-day conference, participants:

- Study the cooperative difference in business and community development
- Explore cooperative principles – their history and their practical and innovative applications in today's dynamic business environment
- Broaden their understanding of cooperatives and their impact on the economy
- Discover cooperative internship and career opportunities

At Rocky Mountain Farmers Union, we see the value this informative and educational conference provides. We are seeking individuals who would benefit from this training, whether they are beginning students of co-ops or they have had some previous cooperative education. The conference is open to all college students 18 years or older: 4-year, 2-year, undergrads and graduate students.

If you interested in learning more, please see the following pages, which include information on the selection process, an application, and a tentative agenda. If you have additional questions feel free to contact Jennifer Luitjens Bahr, RMFU Director of Education, at 303.283.3550 or jennifer.bahr@rmfu.org.

We look forward to hearing from you!
